For those of you who missed out on the Kente Exhibition, and even for those who made it, here is some more information on the process of producing kente.

The KENTE cloth is woven on a narrow horizontal loom. The loom usually uses four heddles (asanan), but in special cases, six or seven heddles (asasia) may be used. The cloth is woven in narrow strip (called ntomaban or bankuo) that is about 3-5 inches wide and about 5-6 feet long. Several strips are sewn together to make a wider piece of cloth for both men and women. A man's cloth may contain up to 24 strips and measure about 5x8 feet. The woman's two-piece cloth may contain 8-12 strips each piece. The largest known kente cloth, measuring about 12X20 feet, is the piece Ghana presented to the United Nations in 1960. This cloth is called tikoro nko agyina - one head does constitute a council. The Asante weaver refers to kente as nwentoma (woven cloth) to distinguish it from the factory-made cloth (ntoma) and the adinkra cloth that is stamped (ntiamu ntoma) by the block-print technique.

The nwentoma is of various categories: ahwepan (plain weave); topreko (plain weave with simple weft inlays); and faprenu (double weave technique that hides the warp threads). The warp threads are laid in such fashion to give a name and meaning to the cloth. At the same time, the weft designs or motifs are each given a name and meaning. These names and meanings reflect Akan beliefs, historical events, social and political organization in the Akan society, or may be named after all manner of people. The ntomaban (strip) shown to the left is called epie akyi (leopard's back). The strip is made up of weft motifs called nwotoa (snail shell), fahia kotwere Agyeman (lean your poverty on Agyeman), akyem (shield), babadua, and nkyinkyim (zigzag). The epie akyi imitates the beautiful patchwork of stripes on the leopard. And, one expression associated with epie akyi is: kurotwamansa to nsuo mu a, ne ho na efo; ne ho nsensanee no de ewo ho daa - the leopard only gets wet when it falls into water; the water does not wash off its stripes. Epie akyi is also used in military terms to refer to the defensive position of using stockpiles of plantain stalks to stop the cannons of the Europeans.

And This Is My Hubby....

by Alex Johnson

"I sometimes turn out for a football team and one Saturday after the game I started chatting with one of my team-mates. He asked me what I was doing here and when I explained that we were in Spain because of my wife's job, he went very quiet. The next weekend he came over and apologized. He was very embarrassed and said he'd had no right to ask about something so personal. As he tried to explain himself, it became obvious that he thought things weren't going well in terms of my own career and I was a henpecked husband being dragged around Europe by the balls."

Matthew Jones, a 34-year-old Welshman, who relocated from London to Barcelona eight months ago when his wife was offered the chance to head up her company's European office, is one of a new group of men, so new in fact that there's still no generally-accepted name for its members. They're not necessarily househusbands. Not all of them are stay-at-home Dads. But each one is certainly a "trailing male."

Nor is it, yet, a very large group, partly because when it comes to relocating for a partner's career, men are less willing than women to uproot themselves. A recent survey by U.S. moving specialists Allied Van Lines revealed that less than half the men interviewed (as opposed to seventy per cent of women) would be happy to move if their "significant other" were relocated to another area for job reasons. Indeed, more than a third said they would simply refuse to consider it compared to 14 per cent of women.

"While the results underscore men's reluctance to move, their attitudes will likely change," says Allied chief executive Mike Fergus. "Fifteen per cent of all transferees are now women and as women continue to advance into executive positions that number is expected to grow."

Matthew, a former investment banker who now works as a consultant, says it was very much a joint decision to move to Barcelona. "We saw it as a great opportunity for us and for the kids to learn Spanish. Also we'd lived abroad before and enjoyed that very much. To be honest, we were also getting a bit fed up with London. "Because of the Internet I can basically do my job from anywhere but I have definitely jumped off the regular employment track. Moving here means I'm probably not going to work for a city bank again. But I don't feel I've made a sacrifice. I feel very fortunate that my wife has a career, which has allowed me to move into something I prefer doing. It's been a very liberating experience."

Steven Tedder was based in the north-east of England before moving to Madrid with his Spanish partner just over two years ago. "While we were happy living in Newcastle, it wasn't a place where we wanted to spend the rest of our lives," he says. "We decided that if we were going to move to Spain, we should do it sooner rather than later, before we started growing roots up north. We both prefer the Spanish lifestyle although we had no illusions that it was going to be all holidays and fiestas."

"We both left stable, relatively well-paid jobs to move here, as well as many friends and of course my family, although they come over regularly to spend time in Spain. On the plus side I'm enjoying a completely new lifestyle, new friends and family that have accepted me as one of their own, even if I am, and probably always will be, 'El Inglés'."

But even if you're comfortable with the role of the trailing male, you still need to be prepared to be the only couple at the dinner party where the main or only breadwinner is the woman. "You certainly need to have an excellent relationship with your partner and the strength of character to find your own way," says Matthew, "because the person with the job is seen as being the dominant partner by the community so you're perceived as being a more minor figure. A lot of people simply assumed that I had gone into semi-retirement and it's quite obvious that the neighbors wonder what the hell I do. I've met plenty of people who have obviously written me off as some kind of hopeless cling-on, including some of my wife's colleagues." Continues next week. Reprinted with permission from author. www.talesmag.com

For those who don't already know, the excellent hairdresser Antoinette has left Quintessential Salon and has just opened a new salon, "Star Unisex Salon", located on Achimota Road at the intersection with Abelemkpe Road. To find the salon, head out on Achimota Road and instead of turning left to go to Lincoln School, simply turn right and her building is right there. The salon is on the first floor of the building (use the stairs at the back) above a shop called "My Time" that sells clothing. Once you know where it is, you will find that it is easier to turn off Achimota Road onto the sliproad just before the corner (before the bus station) and then there is plenty of parking. Monday from 10:00 to 14:00 hrs and Tuesday to Saturday from 09:00 to 18:00 hrs. It is closed on Sundays. 0289 633 711 for the salon and 0244 633 711 Antoinette-

JOLOF RICE is one of the delicacies in Ghana. Here is a short and delicious recipe to help you discover Ghanaian cooking.

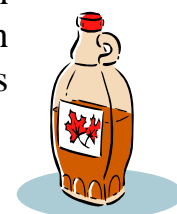

Serving Size : 8 Preparation Time :30:00mins.

Amount	Measure	Ingredient -- Preparation Method
1	c	Dried black-eyed peas
2	md	Eggplants
1	t	Salt
1 1/2	tb	Canola oil
2	lg	Onions, chopped
3	ts	Chopped fresh ginger
2		Jalapeno peppers, roasted, -- stems & seeds removed & chopped
1		Whole garlic clove
2		Garlic cloves, minced
1		Green bell pepper, chopped
4	lg	Tomatoes, chopped
1 1/2	tb	Tomato paste
2	ts	Cayenne
2	ts	Curry powder
		Hot pepper to taste, option
1	lb	Carrots, chopped
1 1/2	c	Long grain brown rice
1/2	lb	Green beans, cut into thirds

Soak peas overnight (Mark's note, soaking black-eyed peas before cooking is unnecessary). Simmer in fresh water for 15 minutes. Drain & reserve cooking water. Slice eggplant into rounds 1/2" thick & place in a colander. Sprinkle with salt & let stand 5 minutes. Heat oil in casserole.

Brown eggplant with 1 tb chopped onions, 1 tb chopped ginger, 1 jalapeno, whole garlic & bell pepper for 5 minutes. Remove eggplant & set aside. Add remaining onion, ginger, garlic, jalapeno, bean liquid, tomatoes, tomato paste, cayenne, curry powder & pepper sauce. Simmer for 10 minutes. Add peas, carrots & rice. Simmer 5 minutes more. Add green beans, eggplant & simmer another 15 minutes. (Mark's note: 15 minutes for brown rice is far too short a time, allow a good 20 minutes before adding the green beans & eggplant).
